EVENTS AND PROGRAMS

Virtual Academic Job Market: Summer Camp

Join us from July 12–30 for our four-week virtual career camp for PhD students and postdocs in the humanities and the social sciences. You’ll engage in a variety of practical activities. For example, you’ll design lessons and units, do micro-teaching sessions, explore case studies in social and emotional learning, and workshop job materials. The instructor is Jeremy Siegman, a PhD alumnus of the political science and anthropology departments and government grants coordinator at Make the Road New York. He will discuss his current role, his career journey, and share advice for crafting a successful career story. RSVP in here.

Teaching in Independent Schools

PATHS seminar offers PhD students and postdocs the opportunity to develop knowledge of independent schools. You’ll examine an array of pedagogical techniques and learn how to draw on your ability to mentor students? Have you thought about academic advising as a viable and exciting career path? This PATHS seminar will introduce you to the advising skills integral to most academic careers while exploring the ways that academic advising speaks to and challenges your existing skillset. The seminar is led by Kalisha Cornett, an associate professor of English, middle school English teacher at Park City Day School, Utah. For further information and registration details, visit here.

CAREERS IN ACADEMIC ADVICE

This PATHS seminar offers PhD students and postdocs the opportunity to develop skills as academic advisors. You’ll become familiar with the role of academic advising at your institution and engage in a variety of practical activities. For example, you’ll design lessons and units, do micro-teaching sessions, explore case studies in social and emotional learning, and workshop job materials. The instructor is Brady Smith, a PhD alumnus of the Divinity School PhD in religion (PhD, Divinity School, 2012) and currently an English instructor, the assistant director of the Writing Specialist, and a graduate research assistant at UC Irvine. He will discuss his current role, his career journey, and share advice for crafting a successful career story. RSVP in here.

PATHS NEWSLETTER

A newsletter that makes a difference: PATHS (Professional Advancement and Training for Humanities and Social Scientists) newsletter provides valuable resources and support for PhD students and postdocs in the humanities and social sciences. Here are some highlights from the latest issue:

- Did You Know? Did you know that Academic Job Market Summer Camp offers PhD students and postdocs the opportunity to develop knowledge of independent schools and learn how to draw on their ability to mentor students? Have you thought about academic advising as a viable and exciting career path? This PATHS seminar will introduce you to the advising skills integral to most academic careers while exploring the ways that academic advising speaks to and challenges your existing skillset. The seminar is led by Kalisha Cornett, an associate professor of English, middle school English teacher at Park City Day School, Utah. For further information and registration details, visit here.

- Human Rights Virtual Library: Graduate Research Internships: The University of Chicago’s Human Rights Virtual Library offers graduate research internships to PhD students and postdocs in the humanities and social sciences. These internships provide an opportunity to work closely with faculty and departments to develop professional skills and gain experience in the field.

- 2021 Summer Internships: Summer internships are available at the University of Chicago for undergraduates, graduates, and postdocs in the humanities and social sciences. These internships provide an opportunity to work closely with faculty and departments to develop professional skills and gain experience in the field.

- Reading List: The Reading List includes a selection of books and articles that will be featured in the next issue of the PATHS newsletter. The list includes a range of topics and perspectives, offering something for everyone.

- Subscribe to the PATHS Newsletter: Students and postdocs in the humanities and social sciences can subscribe to the PATHS newsletter to receive regular updates on career opportunities, events, and resources.